Tonight, Metro Atlanta Democratic Socialists of America’s (MADSA) 15th annual Douglass-Debs Awards Dinner celebrates the courageous work of our comrades. In the past year, our members and allies have led important local, statewide and national movements to advance our goals of social and economic justice.

We began 2019 with a People’s Inauguration in Hurt Park to protest the election of Georgia’s illegitimate governor Brian Kemp. The event included speakers from Atlanta Jobs With Justice, Black Votes Matter, DeKalb County Democrats, DeKalb Young Democrats, Georgia Street Groomers, GLAHR, the International Socialist Organization, Mijente, Our Revolution, the Public Policy Reform Association, Inc., Socialist Coalition of North Georgia, Southerners on New Ground and United Campus Workers of Georgia. Our demands included a repeal of the “use it or lose it” rule, which now threatens to purge over 300,000 citizens from the voting rolls for 2020 Elections.

We joined the Direct Action Hunger Alliance, Atlanta Homeless Relief, and the Housing Justice League to protest the deaths of several houseless people last winter. Members also picketed the Sine die of the Georgia General Assembly’s 2019 legislative session in opposition to Republicans’ forced birthing bill and anti-voting-rights legislation. We rallied against Georgia Power’s energy policies and against appalling conditions at the DeKalb County Jail.

To oppose the rising tide of racist extremism, members of MADSA joined the Frontline Organization Working to End Racism (FLOWER) coalition, which successfully counter-protested white supremacists’ Rock Stone Mountain rally in February and engaged in another antifascist demonstration in Dahlonega in September.

Many MADSA actions this year focused on justice for immigrants, especially the undocumented. Members of our Immigrant Rights working group twice visited incarcerated immigrants at the Stewart Detention Center in Lumpkin, Ga. with El Refugio; engaged in a letter-writing campaign to urge the abolition of the Immigration and Customs Enforcement agency (ICE); and anti-ICE protests in Atlanta. In July, MADSA members helped GLAHR’s “ICEwatch” patrols document ICE activity during raids.

Concern for our brothers and sisters transcended our nation’s borders. This September we joined coalition partners to rally against Brazil’s right-wing Bolsonaro Government whose burning of the Amazon rainforest threatens not only Brazil’s indigenous peoples — but all life on Earth. We mobilized two weekends of October Global Climate Strikes with Extinction Rebellion and other groups. Georgia Tech’s Young Democratic Socialists of America (YDSA) supported the Boycott, Divest and Sanctions (BDS) movement to end Israel’s apartheid regime and free Palestine.

MADSA contingents again participated in the annual MLK Day and Pride marches, as well as an August anti-racism march hosted by the Atlanta Alliance for Black Lives. We joined more protests with Project South, the Council on American-Islamic Relations (CAIR) Georgia, the Georgia Latino Alliance for Human Rights (GLAHR), Bend the Arc: Jewish Action, and J Street, and others.

MADSA members stood in solidarity with organized labor in strike lines with the Communications Workers of America (CWA), Uber and Lyft drivers, and actions by the Coalition of Immokalee Workers. Tonight we are honored to have as our keynote speaker the dynamic labor leader Sara Nelson, president of the Association of Flight Attendants-CWA, AFL-CIO, whose courageous actions ended a government shutdown.

This dizzying amount of community organizing would not have been possible without the leadership of our 2019 chair, the indefatigable Erin Parks; interim Chairs Gregory McKelvey and Jen Garcia; and outgoing executive officers Jose G. Perez, Barbara Joye, Q Benford, Jeff Corkill, and Alexander Hernandez. Together they lead the Southeast in a national symphony movement of Democratic Socialists declaring that “another world is possible.”

DSA’s national membership has surpassed 56,000, including 29 elected officials nationwide. Atlanta has been one of the nation’s fastest-growing chapters, now with more than 700 official members. The answer as to why is simple. Nowhere in America can capitalism’s failures be more clearly seen than in the American South, where Atlanta tops the list of America’s most economically immobile cities, Georgia has the third-highest percentage of uninsured citizens and people of color, and LGBTQIA individuals still fight not only for basic protections from discrimination but for their very lives from militarized police.

It is no wonder, then, that this year’s biennial national DSA convention was held in Atlanta — the first DSA convention held in the South in more than 20 years. Twelve hundred delegates from chapters across the country (including from MADSA, along with dozens of local volunteers) converged on the downtown Westin to debate and decide the next step for our national leadership. The event attracted international attention.

I was honored to give the convention’s opening and closing speeches, in which I urged DSA members to focus on translating the message of Democratic Socialism to their local communities by pushing local, socialist legislation and running for city, county and state elected office. Following the convention, MADSA elected its youngest, most diverse board ever to do just that.

Myself as chair; Membership Secretary Brandyn Buchanan, Treasurer Cole Reardon, Membership Secretary Nate Knauf, and At-Large Officers Catie Elle, Rara Imler, and Q Benford will focus not just on supporting Bernie in 2020 but electing Democratic Socialists to local offices and passing policies that prove that in a socialist South, “y’all” really does mean everybody.

Solidarity Forever,

Councilman Khalid

Highlander Research and Education Center

Since 1932, Highlander has been a catalyst for grassroots organizing and movement building in Appalachia and the U.S. South. Through popular education, participatory research, and cultural work, the Center helps to create spaces — at Highlander and in local communities — where people gain knowledge, hope and courage, expanding their ideas of what is possible. At Highlander, leaders, networks, and movement strands come together to interact, build friendships, craft joint strategy and develop the tools and mechanisms needed to advance a multi-racial, inter-generational movement for social and economic justice in our region.

Known for its support of labor, immigrant, and especially civil rights movements, Highlander has been a target of rightwing attacks in the past. On March 29, 2019, arsonists set fire to the main office building; a white supremacist symbol was found nearby. An investigation is ongoing. However, an outpouring of support is enabling the center to continue with its work.

Here is a summary of the Highlander Center’s rich history:

After visiting Danish folk schools, Miles Horton, a native of Savannah, TN, conceived the idea of a school in the South where teachers would work with both Black and white students to address community problems. In 1932, Horton, Don West, Jim Dombrowski and others founded the Highlander Folk School in Monteagle, TN. They focused first on organizing unemployed and working people, and by the late 1930s Highlander was serving as the de-facto CIO education center for the region, training union organizers and leaders in 11 southern states. During this period, Highlander also fought segregation in the labor movement, holding its first integrated workshop in 1944.

Highlander’s commitment to ending segregation made it a critically important incubator of the civil rights movement. Workshops and training sessions at Highlander helped lay the groundwork for many of the movement’s most important initiatives, including the Montgomery bus boycott, the Citizenship Schools, and the founding of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC). In 1961, after years of red-baiting and several government investigations, the state of Tennessee revoked Highlander’s charter and seized its land and buildings. The school continued its work the very next day as the Highlander Research and Education Center. From 1961-1971, it was based in Knoxville, and in 1972 it moved to its current location near New Market, TN.

In the late 1960s and 1970s, Highlander played a vital role fostering organizing in Appalachia, supporting anti-strip mining and worker health and safety struggles, among other efforts. In the 1980s and 1990s, Highlander expanded its work to support grassroots groups fighting pollution and toxic dumping, and supported the emerging anti-globalization movement by sponsoring workshops on economic human rights and trade and globalization issues and by forging connections with international activists and organizers.

Today, Highlander continues to fight for justice and equality, encouraging the use of culture to enhance social justice efforts, and helping organizations in diverse constituencies develop innovative strategies and alliances. The center fiscally sponsors the Stay Together Appalachia Youth (STAY) Project, which supports young environmental and civil-rights activists in central Appalachia; the National Bail Out Collective, who are building a community-based movement to support our people and end systems of pretrial detention and ultimately mass incarceration; and the Power U Center for Social Change, which recruits and consolidates a core of Black and Brown working class youth whose leadership is uplifted and developed, building power through civic engagement in Miami, Florida.
Renitta Shannon defeated a four-term incumbent Democrat with a bold progressive message in 2016. In January 2017, she was sworn into the Georgia State House of Representatives, to represent the 84th district. Representative Shannon utilizes her impactful public platform to fight stigmas and create legislation for marginalized communities. Her experience in community organizing work around economic, racial, and gender justice equipped her to serve in the Georgia State House.

Renitta speaks on national platforms, about her personal abortion story and the importance of reproductive justice and freedom. She has been a consistent advocate for LGBTQ+ rights, and in 2017 she came out as bisexual, making her the first bi-sexual legislator to serve in the Georgia General Assembly. In her first year as a legislator, Renitta was named Most Valuable Legislator in The Nation magazine’s 2017 “Progressive Honor Roll,” for her work on sexual assault policy.

Committed to making sure immigrants do not experience the same systemic injustices Black Americans have faced for hundreds of years, Renitta was awarded with the “Champion of Immigrant Rights Award” by Asian Americans Advancing Justice, in her second year in office. In mid-2018, Renitta was the keynote speaker at the Center for Reproductive Rights conference, where she discussed “Why Advancing Respectability Politics Hurts the Fight for Reproductive Rights.” She was also a part of the “Making Change at Walmart” tour, giving speeches holding Walmart accountable for paying poverty wages and stealing employee wages. Renitta published a piece in The Brown Girl’s Guide to Politics during Pride month on “Why it Matters to Elect Queer Black Women to Public Office.” She closed out her second year in office by leading a legislator’s boycott of Governor-Elect Brian Kemp’s first public address, for running what she called “a gubernatorial campaign of hate against half of Georgia, targeting Black and brown voters, the #LGBTQ community and women.”

In 2019, Georgia along with the rest of the country saw unprecedented attacks against abortion rights. When Georgia’s Republican party tried to pass a bill to effectively outlaw abortion in the state, Renitta, in an effort to stop the bill from coming to a vote, spoke against the bill and then refused to cede the podium, resulting in her being physically removed from the House floor by House security. “I was determined not to just let them pass a bill to outlaw abortion like some tax bill that nobody cares about,” said Representative Shannon. Renitta serves on the board of Spark Reproductive Justice, and consistently sponsors legislation to drive racial, economic, and gender equity.

Renitta is also the co-founder of Her Term, a Georgia-based initiative committed to targeting, recruiting, and electing progressive women into office. Her work has been featured in Time magazine, Cosmopolitan and Elite Daily and continues to maintain her as a highly sought-after public speaker. Stay connected with her work on Facebook/Twitter/Instagram: @renittashannon.
Sara Nelson has been the International President of the Association of Flight Attendants-CWA, AFL-CIO since 2014, and is currently serving her second four-year term. She stands up against climate change, supports the Green New Deal, and calls on airlines to stop enabling deportations. Sara is a leading voice on issues facing women in the workplace and across the country, encouraging women everywhere to “Join unions, run unions!”

Sara is acclaimed for highlighting aviation safety and security risks in 2018-19 during the longest government shutdown in U.S. history and for calling for a general strike. In February, the New York Times called her “America’s Most Powerful Flight Attendant,” observing that the same week she called for a strike “a handful of air traffic controllers on the East Coast did not show up to work, briefly grounding flights in New York. Hours later, President Trump announced a deal to reopen the government.” InStyle magazine placed her on their 2019 Top 50 Badass Women list. “CBS Sunday Morning,” The Nation, The New Republic, Cosmopolitan, Salon and “PBS NewsHour” have also featured her work.

Sara became a United Airlines flight attendant in 1996 and has been a union activist since nearly the beginning of her flying career, including serving as strike chair and leading communications for nearly 10 years at AFA’s United chapter. She is passionate about AFA’s mission to achieve fair compensation, job security, and improved quality of life for aviation’s first responders as well as a safe, healthy and secure aircraft cabin for passengers and crew. She believes flight attendants can play a pivotal role in strengthening the labor movement, with more public contact than in almost any other job and access to every corner of the earth.

Sara led AFA’s efforts to achieve 18 legislative victories in the FAA Reauthorization Act of 2018, including achieving a two-hour increase in minimum legal rest for flight attendants and other efforts to combat fatigue on the job. Before that, she led the 90-day campaign to reverse national security policy to keep knives and other weapons off planes. She also crafted the campaign for “100,000 Eyes in the Skies,” which successfully resulted in mandatory training for flight attendants to recognize and report human trafficking.

Sara grew up in Corvallis, Oregon and earned a bachelor’s degree from Principia College, with majors in English and education.
Our community mourns the loss of Nikolas Kral, a dedicated fighter for justice and a friend to MADSA and the local movement.

During his time in Atlanta, Nikolas was known and respected as an ever-present working class coordinator behind the Atlanta Light Brigade, letting his righteous lights shine on campaigns and rallies across the full spectrum of human rights: Black Lives Matter, Medicare for All, Fight for $15, the People's Climate March, Forrespect.org, Occupy Our Homes Atlanta, #StopTPP, and the Bernie campaign are only a sampling of the struggles illuminated by his work.

A visit to the home of Nikolas Kral immediately revealed his commitment to these struggles. Imagine a room filled wall-to-wall with dozens of black corrugated plastic boards, battery powered, LED strands, and large bags packed with a vast library of LED letters amidst shelves filled with books on anthropology, neuroscience, and other topics.

Beyond his work with Atlanta Light Brigade, Nikolas was an active social justice organizer and regularly participated in community meetings and direct action, putting his own body on the line in many instances, including multiple arrests with Moral Monday Georgia's campaign for healthcare rights.

Nikolas continued his work once he moved to Philadelphia a few years ago, but before he left he passed on the art of the Light Brigade to friends here in Atlanta. He was a warm, humble, and generous person who was always excited to share his art with us, even after he left Atlanta. We're sad that he will not return to us for another collaboration, but here in Atlanta we will keep his legacy alive and let it shine.

Atlanta legendary activist Richard Rhodes passed away on July 21, 2019, just a few weeks short of his 82nd birthday.

A native of Tampa, Florida, Richard was caught up in the Johns Committee frenzy in Florida from about 1955–1965, as the state declared war on gay men, harassing them outside gay bars and arresting them inside the bars on trumped-up solicitation charges. Always a wit, Richard would laugh that “they always sent the hottest undercover cops inside to entrap gay men!” He also reported that patrons could be arrested for loitering in the bars if they did not have a drink in their hand. “I always had a drink in my hand!” Richard retorted.

Similar to the Joseph McCarthy witch hunt tactics, those arrested were asked to name names, and Richard discovered that he was on the list. Within a matter of days, he fled Florida for upstate New York, and although he was an only child, did not tell his parents where he was for several years. “My folks were law-abiding citizens and if they knew where I was, they would give me up to the authorities, so I didn’t let them know where I went. Don’t ask, don’t tell.”

After returning to Florida in the late 60s, Richard moved to Atlanta in 1971. The second National March on Washington for Lesbian and Gay Rights in 1987 made him an activist. In 1988 he and Melinda Daniels became the first openly gay man and lesbian woman from Georgia to be delegates to the Democratic National Convention, held that year in Atlanta. Subsequently Richard was also a delegate to the 1992 DNC, and also the first openly gay man to head the DeKalb Democratic party, in 1993.

For good measure, he and Gil Robison ran for the Georgia House of Representatives in 1988 as the first openly gay candidates. Neither won, but there is now an LGBT caucus of five in the Georgia House of Representatives.

Until his sudden passing from a stroke, Richard would tout “if you want to know anything about being old and LGBT in Atlanta, come to me!” He lived up to his hype, serving as president of the gay men’s group Prime Timers, and also as president of the Atlanta chapter of SAGE (formerly known as Senior Action in a Gay Environment). In SAGE he had a motto “Elmo: Enough, Let’s Move On” for those who tended to dominate discussions.

We mourn his passing and celebrate his considerable accomplishments fomenting freedom for all.

–Dave Hayward, coordinator of the Atlanta LGBTQ history project Touching Up Our Roots
If there was ever a preeminent activist, visionary organizer and journalist seeking justice and the truth about oppressive systems everywhere, it was most definitely Bruce Dixon, who joined the ancestors on June 28, 2019. Through his work, he also provided the opportunity for others to have a voice. He was 68 years old.

Born of a working-class Black family on the southside of Chicago, Bruce immediately took to the streets as a young man in order to improve and advance opportunities for the Black community and against racist policies.

In the 1960s he joined the Black Panther Party alongside Fred Hampton and was involved in organizing work in Chicago’s housing projects. Not surprisingly, he worked and organized diligently against the notorious Daley machine (named for Mayor Richard J. Daley) and for Harold Washington, who was to become the first Black mayor of Chicago in 1983.

Bruce moved to Atlanta in the early 2000s, and yet again his organizing was transformative. He worked in Cynthia McKinney’s campaign for Congress, in which he met activists galore. Then shortly after, Bruce, along with friends Margaret Kimberley and Glen Ford, created an on-line journal called the “Black Commentator” and in 2006 they developed the “Black Agenda Report,” which is a weekly journal of news, commentary and analysis from the Black left published each week and is still on-going.

In 2009, Bruce joined the Green Party, and, not surprisingly, became a Green Party leader in Georgia. Indeed, “Presente!” Bruce, you will always be loved, honored and appreciated for your remarkable career and commitments, along with your energy and relentless devotion to truth-telling and seeking justice in the United States and the world. You have been and will remain an inspiration for us all. I know you would expect nothing less! In fact, I know you would also give us our marching orders, and we will follow your lead!

—Heather Gray

Gary Washington was a lifelong labor activist whose profound commitment to peace and to racial and economic justice infused Atlanta’s progressive community for decades. Two of Gary’s many outstanding contributions to trade unionism in Atlanta were his leadership in the Mead Packaging strike of 1972, and, later, his premiering and for many years producing and anchoring the “Labor Forum” radio program on WRFG (89.3FM). That show, devoted to promoting unions and workers’ self-determination in all walks of life, continues today, produced by Dianne Mathiowetz, who took it on when Gary became ill.

Raised mostly in Atlanta, Gary was deeply moved as a youth by Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.’s powerful nonviolent witness. His parents taught him early about the evils of Jim Crow segregation, and he always refused to ride in the back of Atlanta’s then-segregated buses even as a child. But he got a taste of the more militant wing of the Black liberation movement as a teenager living in New York City when he joined the Black Panthers. He proudly identified as a revolutionary for the rest of his life.

Gary was a voracious reader who attended both Morehouse College and Georgia State University. His nickname when he started working at Atlanta’s Mead plant in the early 70s was “Schoolboy,” but in truth he got most of his insights on his own as an organic intellectual. Gary often greeted friends with a stack of articles or books to share and discuss.

The Mead strike was Gary’s first exposure to the power of collective bargaining. He threw himself into a conflict that was both political and economic and racial, since Black workers were the most mistreated and disrespected among Mead’s workforce. Gary worked closely with October League activists who led the strike, but he was—then and later—an independent thinker who worked closely with many on the left without aligning fully with any. He remained a steward in Mead’s union shop for decades afterward.

While Gary was militant on issues of racism and economic injustice, he also proudly identified as an anti-war and anti-nuclear activist even though those movements were predominantly white. He became active in the 1970s in Georgians Against Nuclear Energy and later in the Atlanta Peace Alliance. Gary’s commitment to peace steadfastly connected it to justice and included a critique of colonialism and imperialism, and his work often involved educating young whites on those connections.

Gary was what his mother (who was also his mentor) might have called “a character.” He had a sharp wit that he employed for social change. He also never minded being the only Black person in a crowd that gathered relative to an issue of concern to him. In fact, he took pride in crossing racial divides in a variety of ways, ranging from political to outrageous, and people were rarely too racist or too hopeless to be reached, in his view. That approach holds lessons for us in today’s “cancel culture.”

Gary was one of a kind and he will be keenly missed by scores, probably hundreds, of social justice Georgians.

Frederick Douglass was born a slave in rural Maryland but managed to learn to read and write, so by age 16 he was teaching a Sunday school for other slaves. After escaping from his owner in 1838 he fled to New York, changed his surname from Bailey to Douglass, and joined the anti-slavery movement. He became black America’s most electrifying speaker and a famous writer, authoring several autobiographies and editing The North Star and other abolitionist publications. After the Civil War, Douglass also became the first Black U.S. citizen to hold a high government position, including ambassador to Haiti. He dedicated himself to building a racially integrated America where social values and economic options would be based on performance, not skin color, and supported equal rights for women. He died of a heart attack shortly after delivering a rousing speech at a women’s rally.

Eugene Victor Debs served two terms as a Democrat in the Indiana General Assembly, then became a full-time union organizer. As founder and president of the American Railway Union, the nation’s first industrial union, he led a successful strike for higher wages in 1893. He later went to jail for leading a strike against the Pullman Palace Car Company. In cooperation with Mother Jones, Bill Haywood and others, he helped found the Industrial Workers of the World. He also was the Socialist Party’s candidate for president five times between 1900 and 1920. He served two and a half years in prison for opposing World War I as a capitalist venture that used workers as pawns, and in 1920, while still in prison, he received over one million votes. Debs is the father of industrial unionism and democratic socialism in the U.S.

Solidarity forever
Solidarity forever
Solidarity forever
For the union makes us strong

When the union’s inspiration
Through the worker’s blood shall run
There can be no power greater
Anywhere beneath the sun
Yet what force on earth is weaker
Than the feeble strength of one
But the union makes us strong

Solidarity forever
Solidarity forever
Solidarity forever
For the union makes us strong

They have taken untold millions
That they never toiled to earn
But without our brain and muscle
Not a single wheel can turn
We can break their haughty power
Gain our freedom when we learn
That the union makes us strong

Solidarity forever
Solidarity forever
Solidarity forever
For the union makes us strong

In our hands is placed a power
Greater than their hoarded gold
Greater than the might of atoms
Magnified a thousandfold
We can bring to birth a new world
From the ashes of the old

Douglass-Debs Dinner 2019 15
At nearly 100 square miles, the new City of South Fulton covers nearly as much land as Atlanta. Atlanta’s new twin city, established in 2017, is the fifth largest in the State of Georgia. With a population that is 90 percent African American, South Fulton is the blackest big city in America. Elected as part of South Fulton’s inaugural City Council, DSA Chair Councilman khalid is the first Democratic Socialist City Councilperson elected in Georgia and the first BlackLivesMatter organizer elected in the United States. Since winning office, he has led a progressive coalition that raised the minimum wage of city workers to $15 per hour; “banned the box” on employment applications; decriminalized possession of less than an ounce of cannabis; abolished Columbus Day (the first in Georgia); made Election Day a full, paid holiday; regulated single use plastics; and passed resolutions opposing Georgia’s “forced-birth” abortion bill and I.C.E. detention centers.

As the new chair of the Metro Atlanta Democratic Socialists of America (MADSA), Councilman khalid plans to use his experience running winning city council, State House and Senate races to recruit more winning Democratic Socialist candidates and pass socialist legislation throughout metropolitan Atlanta and in Georgia’s General Assembly.
